

If you're a movie lover who wants to watch the latest films in a high-quality but is tired of paying a lot of money for it, this post will come as both good news and bad. You see, downloading films from torrent sites comes with perks and perils alike. So long as you know all there is to know about both, you'll be able to make an informed choice on whether or not it's worth the risk! Check out our tips below before heading over to Google or clicking that "download" button. ##The introduction should be at least 150 words. Introduction should be an information-packed paragraph that sets up the article. This paragraph should answer the question, "What makes this guide different from all those other articles?" ##The first section should be no more than 30% of the total length of the page. The goal is to make a good first impression, and a good first impression is a fast-reading article. Keep it short and sweet, or your readers might fall asleep! ##The second section should be no more than 30% of the total length of the page. The goal is to make a good second impression, and a good second impression is a quick re-reading to confirm that you didn't miss anything important. ##The conclusion should be no more than 30% of the total length of the page. The goal is to make a good third impression, and a good third impression is to end the article on a strong note that reminds your reader why they are reading what you have written. ##Add at least 3 pieces of media per post. Use photos, videos, gifs etc., but don't go overboard. Leave some text for people who are skimming through. The more pieces of media you can include, the easier it will be for readers to find you and remember your posts and keep coming back for more! ##There should be no more than 2 ads per post. We all love ads, but we also know they're annoying. It really depends on how much money an advertiser is willing to pay to promote their product or how much they want you to legitimately like their product/service. For us bloggers, it's up to our call :) ##If your post is on your site's site, use bold formatting for page titles. This makes it easier for users of search engines like Google so they can easily find your post when searching for the term on your site. ##If your post is a link to a page on another site, use italics for the page title. When a user clicks the link from their browser, they're taken straight to that website's page title, which they already read. It makes it quicker for them to see what you're writing about! Also, using italics will make it easier for users of search engines like Google to find your post when searching for the term on your site. ##Keep paragraphs short and crisp. Don't go overboard with long types of sentences – keep them to a maximum of 2 – 3 lines – you can have an entire post devoted to detailed explanations if you really want.
